

The Line formed in the summer of 2004 when guitarists Jeff Holleran and Rob Melchionna decided to put together a band that would combine the perfection of the 3 minute pop song with a heavy edge and hints of noise, mixed together with “real” country music... or more simply, a band that would play Rock and Roll Music. Together, along with promises (threats?) of fame, fortune, muscles, and fancy cars, they were able to convince Josh Bloomer that he didn't just want to play drums in their band, he NEEDED to. All they needed was a bass player. The three of them searched high and low, through the cities, suburbs, and rural areas of New England. They had almost given up hope (they had pretty high standards after all) when into their Allston rehearsal space stepped Jeff Dudziak, bassist extraordinaire! Thus... We have The Line.

The Line quickly stepped into the Boston music scene and have been playing regularly in mid-sized clubs. The band has steadily built a very loyal and growing following through word of mouth and the energy of its live performances. The Line is currently in the studio recording their debut CD, which they expect to release toward the end of this summer.
